In this lesson, we looked at commenting on others' work and posts and specifically we looked at giving a compliment, making a request, and showing appreciation. There are many ways to connect with other professionals. Here are a few helpful resources:

1. You can look at other eportfolios. As we looked in the resources for lesson 1, there are many websites that you can use for eportfolios. You can find other professionals on those sites and look at their work and posts. For example, many professionals go to others' sites and network with them like Behance. <https://www.behance.net/>

2. You can also look at others' work. On LinkedIn, you want to network with your friends, colleagues and former classmates. To find other professionals in your own field on LinkedIn, it's a great idea to join a group and you can also learn from top professionals in the field by going to this link <https://www.linkedin.com/pulse/discover>. You can also network on Instagram and YouTube. On Twitter, you can do several things to connect with other professionals:

- follow people and organizations in your field.
- create a list of those people and organizations so that you can see what they post easily. This link shows you step by step process on how to add a list.

- join a group that talks on Twitter at specific times in your field. These groups are called Twitter chats. Here is a list of those twitter chats and their schedules:

3. You can network in a lot of other ways and here are some:

- One way is to do a call for action. Asking others to take action can help connect you. A freelance artist could write: Oil painting for a friend. #flowers #atlanta @myfriend

- Another way is to ask questions. A video gamer could write a wh question on his YouTube channel: What are your favorite video games?
- A third way is to ask others first to comment on your work. I would love for you to comment on my work or I would love for you to look at my site and give me some advice.
